The Giz Wiz looks at a few gadgets you're probably going to want.

New Electronic Gadgets You just might want!

Power LogOn from Access Smart is designed so hackers can't get access to your personal information. That's because your passwords are not stored on your computer, they are stored on a Smart Card, so there's nothing for hackers to find. It also helps you create complex, random passwords that Access Smart says can take over 90,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 years to crack. We're testing that now, so come back in 89,000,000,000,000, 000, 000,000,999 years and we'll let you know how we faired.) What I like about the Power LogOn is that I don't have to remember or type in passwords. If I wanted, I could have a different user name and password for every website. That means you can get rid of those Post-it notes or bits of tape stuck to the computer with your top secret passwords on them. After the software is loaded as you visit websites and type in your log-in info, you are asked if you would like Power LogOn to remember it. As with so many other things, it does not work within AOL. However you can bring up the name and password for any website and use the drop and drag feature to fill in the blanks. There's a desktop version and a PC card slot version. Cost is $129.95 for either. www.powerlogon.com
